Command and Control is the Department’s system for designating authority over operations and providing direction to resources to accomplish the Department’s mission. The Command and Control system consists of written policies, pre-identified levels of authority, procedures for implementing command decisions, and the information systems necessary to communicate direction and related information.

The Command and Control system is structured into three levels of authority; Department, Region and Unit. Each level is served by a command or coordination center. Instructions and information are conveyed through the levels of the Command and Control structure utilizing resource data, telecommunication, and information systems.

Personnel at all levels of the Command and Control system should have a strong knowledge of the Department’s Command and Control policies and procedures.
